Livestock Inspector, J. F. Brinkley of Springerville, left at the Herald-News office a bunch of samples of grass which he is growing on his ranch on the east fork of the Little Colorado River, timothy, red top, and orchard grass. He has 35 acres planted to rye and timothy. He plowed this ground and planted last fall. The rye and timothy are now ripening, are from five to five and half feet high and the stand is thick. The orchard grass is about four feet high and is a good stand, too. The red top was sown on natural grass land, without plowing or other cultivation; it is about three feet high and a good stand in among the native grasses. His ranch is in the White Mts., near the Sheep Crossing, and has an elevation of about 9,200 ft. He has a new hay barn on his ranch, 32x32x16 which will not begin to hold all his hay, and this just the beginning. Besides grasses he can raise potatoes, cabbage, turnips, etc., which would take premiums at any state fairs.
